Course Overview

Female law enforcement professionals play a vital role in police departments, sheriff departments, constable offices, correctional institutions, and probation/parole departments across North America. Females not only serve on the front lines, but they are now advancing to executive positions to include police chiefs and elected sheriffs in major cities in the United States. Although female law enforcement officers are making major advancements, there are still challenges unique to females that exist. This one day training course was designed from the female law enforcement professional's perspective. Attendees will discuss challenges unique to females in law enforcement specifically: gender differences, training, equipment, work life balance, mental & physical strength, communication, and career advancement. Information will be presented to help female law enforcement professionals thrive in a male-dominated work environment. The course will facilitate open dialogue and attendees will develop strategies to deal with issues and challenges specific to women in law enforcement. The Females in Law Enforcement training course was developed by Alisha Shoates James. She has over a decade of experience in law enforcement at the local, state, and federal level. Ms. James served in various capacities including: patrol, precinct under-cover operations, background and recruiting, training academy instructor, firearms instructor, and non-lethal training ammunition instructor. Currently, Ms. James serves as a regional director for a fully-accredited state law enforcement agency in Tennessee. In her current role, she continues to stay connected to training by serving as an adept subject matter point of contact for any firearms or defensive tactics related issues for her division.
